(EXPLANATORY NOTE: This is a rough approximation of a form which might be used for recording individual items of information, from press translations or other sources, in sufficiently small portions to permit filing by intelligence agencies without further excerpting or duplication. Each agency could insert titles in space at upper-left, to suit its own filing needs. Producing agency, such as FDD, would begin by inserting suitable subject classification numbers at upper right, and distribution of each item would be on basis of these subject classification numbers. Several subject classifications might be assigned to a single item. A single news story might be broken down into a number of separate information notes, a complete translation of a single news story might thus appear as a set of ten separate information notes, each comprising one separable item of information, and perhaps consisting of one paragraph from the original news story.) The size of this form would permit flexible filing. Folded vertically it would fit a 4" by 6" file. With upper and lower margins cut off it would fit a 5" by 8" file. It could be filed edgewise in larger files or dossiers.
